Welcome to the Foreign Languages Forum

Every new academic year begins with fresh ambitions, new challenges and countless opportunities to inspire our students. It also reminds us that great teaching never stands still. Our profession evolves continuously, shaped by new research, new technologies and, above all, by the creativity and dedication of teachers.

The Foreign Languages Forum was created to bring our community together. Today you will hear from leading educators, publishers, marketing consultants and active classroom teachers who will share practical ideas, approaches and experiences that you can take back to your own classroom.

Whether you are a teacher, Director of Studies, school owner, teacher trainer or educational consultant, we hope you will leave with fresh perspectives, valuable professional connections and practical strategies that will make a difference from your very next lesson.

Take time to visit the exhibition, meet our exhibitors, explore the latest teaching resources and continue the conversations between sessions. Some of the most valuable ideas of the day often emerge over coffee.

Thank you for being part of this year's Forum and for your continued commitment to language education. We hope you enjoy a day filled with inspiration, learning and meaningful professional exchange.

Have a wonderful Forum.

		Learning English in 2026: What We Teach, How We Assess Through Exams and Why Teachers Still Matter English language teaching is evolving rapidly, influenced by changing learner needs, new technologies and increasing reliance on high stakes examinations. This session explores three key questions facing ELT today: What should we be teaching? Do current English language exams always assess learners fairly and accurately? And why does the teacher remain central to successful learning? Drawing on recent developments in language assessment and practical classroom examples, including the Teaching with Heart series, the presentation offers a balanced and thought-provoking reflection on the future of English language education.

When Homework Lies: The AI Reality Gap in Exam Preparation

14:45 Students are using AI, and homework may no longer show the whole truth. This practical session explores the "AI Reality Gap" in exam preparation: the gap between what students appear able to produce with AI-supported homework and what they can actually write independently under classroom or exam conditions.

15:10

We will look at how this affects writing assessment, mock exam decisions, parent communication, and final exam readiness. Participants will leave with a simple framework for using controlled writing moments, transparent homework policies, mistake-pattern tracking, and teacher-led AI workflows to protect academic judgement and make better decisions.

This session is about helping teachers regain reliable evidence of student ability in an AI-assisted world.
